3. Describe in your own words one painting from this chapter which suggests that the British were more powerful than Indians. How does the artist depict this?

Ans.

The painting which depicts the discovery of the body of Tipu Sultan shows the British as more powerful than Indians. In this painting, the British General is shown as if standing on a high pedestal and exuding all the confidence. The might of the British empire is visibly marked in the paintings to establish a strong root in Indian soil. On the other hand, Tipu Sultan is shown half naked and lifeless; lying in the dark recess. The painting appears to announce that those who dare to challenge the British authority would meet the same fate.

4. Why did the scroll painters and potters come to Kalighat? Why did they begin to paint new themes?

Ans :The scroll painters and potters come to Kalighat in the hope of new patrons and never buyers of their art. After the 1840s, a new trend was visible within the Kalighat artists. Living in a society where values, tastes, social norms and customs were undergoing rapid changes, Kalighat artists responded to the world around and produced paintings on social and political themes.

5. Why can we think of Raja Ravi Varma's paintings as national?

Ans :Raja Ravi Varma was one of the first artists who tried to create a style that was both modern and national. He used the Western art of oil painting and realistic life study to paint themes from Indian mythology. He dramatised on canvas scene after scene from the Indian epics Ramayana and Mahabharata. This portrayal of an Indian consciousness is what makes his paintings national. This was perhaps one of the reasons why his paintings were popular not only among Indian princes and art collectors but also among the masses.

6. In what way did the British history paintings in India reflect the attitudes of imperial conquerors?

Ans : The British history paintings in India reflected the attitudes of imperial conquerors. The British history paintings sought to dramatise and recreate various episodes of British imperial history. These paintings celebrated the British power, their victories and their supremacy. The imperial history paintings attempted to create a public memory of imperial triumphs. Victories had to be remembered, implanted in the memory of people, both in India and Britain. Only then could the British create a lasting impression in the mind of people.

7. Why do you think some artists wanted to develop a national style of art?

Ans : The paintings of Ravi Varma were rejected as they seemed like imitating western ideas. Some artists felt that his art was unsuitable for depicting the nations ancient myths and legends. They felt that a genuine Indian style of painting had to draw inspiration from non-Western art traditions, and try to capture the spiritual essence of the East. These artists broke away from the convention of oil painting and the realistic style, and turned for inspiration to medieval Indian traditions of miniature painting and the ancient art of mural painting in the Ajanta caves. Rabindranath Tagore was one of the first artists who wanted to develop a national style of art.

8. Why did some artists produce cheap popular prints? What influence would such prints have had on the minds of people who looked at them?

Ans : The mechanical printing presses were set up in different parts of India by the late nineteenth century allowed prints to be produced in large numbers than produced by manual labour. These prints could therefore be sold cheap in the market. As a result, even the poor could buy them. The popular prints of the early twentieth century carried the nationalist messages to far and wide. Such popular prints would have inspired people to fight British rule. Thus the prints could create a platform for the spread nationalist ideas across the regions of India
